Find out what's really happening in collision repair

The collision repair industry is changing fast, so it's essential to know what's happening in order to maintain a successful and profitable business in the face of so much change. CCIF is a unique open forum that brings together all industry stakeholders - collision repairers, insurers, trainers, suppliers, wholesalers, service providers and trade associations. It focuses on the development of best practices and practical solutions to common national issues and challenges. CCIF also provides specialist presenters with new information on subjects that participants have defined as "Need to Know" topics. CCIF takes place 4 times a year in different cities across Canada.

CCIF continues to break attendance records. "People are realizing that if they want to be informed and voice their opinion on issues that affect them, they have to show up", says Chairman, Larry Jefferies, "but we need still more collision repairers to get involved in the intelligent debate that takes place at CCIF". CCIF is the catalyst that connects industry stakeholders and the promoter that influences those who can make change happen – from individual shop owners to corporations and trade associations.

At CCIF you'll learn about issues such as accreditation, training, innovation in the repair process and more – all topics on which your ideas and views are welcome and which will be of direct benefit to you.

It is essential that you participate in the only national voice of the collision repair industry by attending CCIF Halifax. CCIF meetings are professionally run, positive in nature, energizing and great value.
